YOUR PROBLEMS by Ann Landers

A Little Domestic Problem

Dear Ann: I've filed for divorce three times and each time my husband has forced his way into the house, breaking locks and windows and I can't get him out. I've called the law but they say it's a "domestic problem" and we should settle it between ourselves.

any way molesting his wife. If he violates that order he can then be hauled in for contempt of court.

Young people who kiss because it looks like great fun in the movies are often disappointed. The anticipation usually surpasses the realization. A kiss should be a symbol of deep mutual affection and not just an indoor sport.

My husband has had a girl friend for over three years. When he took me to the hospital to have my last baby he dropped me off in front and didn't come back for two days. After that, he lived with this girl in her parent's home.

Dear Ann: I've thought of writing to you so many times but never had the nerve. My problem is upsetting me to the point where I must get it off my chest.

It seems that things teenagers did years ago, before the advent of radio, TV, jukeboxes, etc., are too old-fashioned for our younger set. True, many of the teenagers of today are not even aware of the modes of amusement of the past, but in parts of the country where they are still practiced the younger set thoroughly enjoy them.

She's only 22 and he keeps telling me that a sweet, innocent kid she is. They travel around together as Mr. and Mrs. and he introduces her as his wife although we have three children and everyone knows it.

I'm worried about kissing. They make such a big deal of kissing in the movies and love magazines that I always had the idea a kiss was supposed to be something wonderful. All my girl friends think kissing is grand, so there must be something wrong with me.

Archbishop Makarios is unique in his role of Cypriot statesman. He is the only archbishop in the world elected by his people to negotiate on political issues. He fulfills this extraordinary dual-role of priest and political leader with all the final traditional characteristics of both. His devotion to his Orthodox faith is probably no greater than his devotion to his faithful flock, for the right to be free and independent.

Last year I had him arrested for reckless driving. He ran his car into mine on the highway — intentionally, I'm sure. This should give you an idea of what kind of person he is. How can I get rid of such a man?—Lillian M.

I just don't enjoy kissing. I've kissed a few boys. I thought I was crazy over, but the minute they kiss me my feelings turn cold and I don't like them at all. I can't understand why I'm like this. Please help me before this wrecks my whole life.

I asked Archbishop Makarios of the British and U. S. insistence that Cyprus is an important NATO defense base and cannot be allowed to deteriorate under the shifting winds of political changes at present. His reply was confident, crisp and to the point. "So long as the wishes of our people are not satisfied," he said, "Cyprus is indeed a precarious defense base. The argument of the British government for holding the island for defense cannot take precedence over self-determination. Neither can Middle East oil be protected from a base where the people are opposed to those who rule them. No political, or defense issues can take precedence over justice and honor. We are ready to give proper guarantees for using Cyprus as a base for the free world under conditions which will make such defense stronger than it is today. For under freedom 300,000 Cypriots will stake their lives for the defense of their soil."

I don't know how this mess could possibly be construed as a "domestic problem." See a lawyer.

The Freak — You didn't tell me your age, and that's important. If you are 16 or under, don't worry. If you are 17 or 18 you have reason to be concerned. If you are 19 or over you need more help than I can give you in this column.

When I speak to him about it he says, "I was good enough to marry, wasn't I?" Then we get into a fight. Please, some advice.—L.F.D.

If you've filed for divorce and your husband keeps breaking into the house, get a restraining order. This prohibits the husband from committing acts of violence or in-

Forget about trying to teach the slob — concentrate on the children. Keep correcting them and insist they eat properly. When they say "Well Daddy does it this way..." Tell them Daddy learned his manners so long ago that sometimes he forgets. Don't set Father up as the horrible example and criticize him in the presence of the children or you'll have a problem that will make the table manners seem plenty unimportant.

Archbishop Makarios plans to visit the United States in September and such visit no doubt will add much to his prestige and stature. Al-

Get Out of the Rut

Are you constantly nervous, irritable, and tired? Do you have tired blood, headaches, and nagging backaches?

You do? Maybe you ought to take Hadacol or see your doctor. But it could be that all you need is a vacation.

Something things look brighter after you return for a while anyway. Routine work doesn't seem as routine, the weeds in yard seem to become a little less irritating, the bills in the mail a little less pressing, the paint that's flaking off the house a little less noticeable, and the shine on the seat of your pants a little less important.

As a recent victim of summer fatigue, I can vouch for this. I just returned from my yearly respite from work. It's great.

These perennial problems don't go away; they just get smaller.

Some people like to mean that they are so busy that they couldn't possibly get away or that the business couldn't get along without them. They don't stop to consider that if they have a heart attack, the business may have to get along without them.

If you have kids, the problems of taking a vacation may be a little larger, but maybe Grandma would like to see them for a week or so. Or maybe they could go along with instructions to behave.

Foey. There's a lot to be said for the old country store keeper who just hung up a "Gone Fishing" sign when he got tired.

The scenery may not be the grandest, but it's the change that helps. Almost everybody slips into a rut and needs to be jogged out of it.

Vacations may not be relaxing physically (we spent most of our time tramping around looking at the Grand Drive, look, and be merry, for tomorrow you'll have to go back to work.

Greeks Love the Archbishop

ATHENS, Greece — With the possible exception of Eleftherios Venizelos, famed Greek prime minister after World War I, no Greek personality has captivated the imagination of 12 million Greeks as does the Archbishop of Cyprus, Makarios, today. For he is not only the symbol of Cypriot independence from Britain and "enosis," or union with Greece, but he is the rallying point of a rising Greek nationalism in the strategic Mediterranean. Ever since his return to Athens last April from a 13-month confinement in the Seychelles islands on the Indian ocean, Archbishop Makarios continues to receive the homage and acclamation of peasant and prince on his native soil.

though he has traveled in the U. S. extensively before (New York to Los Angeles), this will be his first visit where his role of statesman will exceed that of his high religious rank. For Makarios carries the banner of Cypriot freedom foremost in his mind... and everyone who will receive him in the U. S. will instantly recognize the tenacity of his purpose.

stirring personality, millions are awed by his presence and dedication. King Paul and Queen Frederika have him as their frequent palace guest, an unusual royal expression of confidence and respect.

I have just had the privilege of another exclusive interview with Archbishop Makarios at his private office at 13 Solonos St. here in the heart of Athens. He looked better, more vibrant and enthusiastic than at any previous visits I had with him here and in Cyprus. He expressed more optimism and hope for Cypriot freedom than during my previous interview with him here in Athens prior to his detention by the British.

Here in Athens, where Makarios has emerged even above the Karamalis government as the most popular and Tall, athletically built Makarios led me to the door as the interview concluded, as a man sure of every stride and every step. "Not I, but right will win in the end," he said smilingly. Greek politicians, like Greek Ambassadors to the U.S. George Melas, with whom I dined today on his return to Athens from Washington, were uneasily trying to figure out the political effect of Makarios' visit to the U. S. As one of them said, "No one but the Almighty knows what will occur—and there is no middle man between Makarios and the Almighty."

Do It Yourselfes

Editor, HERALD — After reading the article "Teenagers Want More Recreation" in the Aug. 25 issue of the Torrance HERALD, I feel that it time to start a real debate on the question.

I would be happy to hear from any or all of you and I am ready and willing to do everything in my power to help you.

I feel very seriously that the teenagers are perfectly right in their demands, but I also feel that they as a group are terribly negligent in their duties to the community as well.

I would like to re-iterate, you guys and gals are going to have to earn this, but it is something I am certainly sure you will be proud to have been a part of after you graduate from this group into adulthood.

Bond Meeting

Editor, Torrance Herald: — Your city has been struggling to acquire and develop park sites for the children and adults of all ages. At the rate this has been possible out of current income, our young people will be married and gone before adequate facilities might be available.

Your parks and airport are closely related, as one complements the other.

I am the father of three teenagers, one of which is a student of North Torrance High, so the problem posed by Dave, Beverly and Jim is not a new one to me. I have not been active in local youth groups, because up until I read this article, I was thoroughly disgusted with the teenagers' attitude.

Consequently, your city council has set Oct. 29, 1957, as the date for a special bond election. The citizens will then have the opportunity to express their wishes regarding parks and the airport.

The attitude from my viewpoint, is the teenagers want everything given to them with nothing given in return. I hope I am wrong, and if I am, I hereby enlist my services toward the betterment of youth recreation facilities.

Very little time is left to communicate the facts. Your interest is urgently needed!

A local youth group could be self supporting and completely controlled by youth itself, with guidance from local civic groups, such as PTA, Chamber of Commerce, Junior Chamber of Commerce, City Council.

Thursday, Sept. 5, 1957, in the council-chambers of the city hall, 3031 Torrance Blvd., at 7:30 p.m., is the date set for our first meeting. Please come!

I have a great many ideas I would like to discuss with a group like Dave, Beverly, and Jim along with representatives from all local teenage groups. I am not a promoter nor do I have a background of public audience, but I do have an earnest desire to help you guys and gals with this problem.

County Fair Set At EUB Church This Saturday

A "county fair" and resumption of Sunday evening services highlight the week's activities at the Central Evangelical United Brethren Church, 1543 Marcelina Ave.

Narbonne Ave. Baptists Take In 262 Members

A total of 262 new members have joined the Narbonne Ave. Baptist Church, 24730 Narbonne Ave., during the past year, according to the pastor, the Rev. Robert A. Wells.

Since the pastor and his family are on vacation, the Rev. Floyd Rolf will speak at both 11 a.m. and 7:30 p.m. services Sunday.

The local church has set September as "Back to Sunday School Month."

Rev. Boyd to Speak Sunday

How to find "Your Inner Power" will be the sermon topic of the Rev. Elsie L. Boyd, guest speaker, at the 11 a.m. Sunday services of the Church of Religious Science, 503 S. Catalina Ave.

LUTHERANS TO OCCUPY BUILDING

The Sunday school of First Lutheran Church, Carson and Flower, will move into the new education building just completed at 9:30 a.m. Sunday.

The new building makes it possible for the Sunday school to be departmentalized. Each department will have its own opening service and each is equipped with a little altar, a lectern, and a piano to create a worship center for the group.

The Sunday school will have a class for every age. Two new classes have been created, for young adults and an inquirers' class, taught by the pastor. This class is for all those who wish to study the doctrines of the Christian church in order to prepare themselves for church membership.
